This is a story of gifted kids and proud parents, told as it is lived--at breakneck speed. Athletic little girls start playing tennis at four, competing at seven, making career decisions before they're old enough to drive. But there are risks that come with the exhilaration of achievement: even the most talented teenager can be undone by an abused body or an undisciplined mind. There are no guarantees, only the wild temptations of money and fame in a professional sport that didn't exist when the girls we meet in this book were born. And there are tough lessons that the parents and their daughters must learn, because women's tennis is a big business in which a youngster's age, appearance, and poise matter as much as her backhand.
